Project topic(s): Reimagining the Future of Policing and Other Criminal Justice Projects

Brief description of scientific issues:
The intensified focus on policing and the various reform efforts present a ripe opportunity for social psychologists to work with community members and police officers to reimagine a future of policing that is grounded in psychological theory and research. The SPARQ team is looking for a summer RA to join us in this endeavor, assisting on a number of projects geared toward exploring the future of policing.

Skills required:
The project does not require previous research experience, but we are looking for an individual who possesses these qualities:
motivated and curious detail-oriented good organizational skills critical thinker flexible and reliable

Skills to be learned:
Conducting literature reviews
Designing interventions
Coding qualitative data
Applying social psychology principles to solve real world problems

Hours: Part time
